CHI home health, hospice reopens, hiring nursing staff, raising funds

Joel Babcock grew up as a child of missionaries with his dad smuggling Bibles, and has served as a missionary himself. Now he's turned his caring heart toward health care, working with CHI Home Health and Hospice, a program that serves people in their homes. Last week, Joel told us that our local program is up and running again with 15 people on hospice for end of life comfort care. He is currently raising funds for hospice patients without insurance or means to pay. The program also helps patients who are home bound and rehabilitating in their homes, and provides palliative care for those living with a disease. The program serves those living within 60 miles of Dickinson and is hiring nursing staff.
